Reading this planner

1|

The first column shows the herbs best started from seeds indoors, outdoors, or from rhizomes or plants.

2|

To make sure you know exactly which herb is mentioned, you'll find the Latin name.

3|

Some herbs are annuals and need to be planted every year. Others are perennials and keep growing for multiple years.

4|

Plant the herbs in a location that will benefit their growth: sunny, half-shade, or shady.

5|

- ☐ Best time to start sowing indoors.
- ☐ Best time to plant the seedlings outdoors.
- ☐ Harvest time!

Good to know

Organic & Heirloom

Organic and heirloom seeds are preferred when starting a herb garden. F1 seeds or GMO seeds don't have medicinal properties and you won't be able to propagate.

Starting with seeds, plants or rhizomes

Most herbs can be started from seeds, but sometimes it's better to buy small plants and add them to your garden (e.g. lavender or rosemary). Both work fine. Try to buy organic or heirloom (not modified) seeds and plants if you can.

Planting vs foraging

Many other herbs such as dandelion and nettle are great additions to a herbal apothecary. However, these herbs are widely available in the wild. No need to plant those yourself if you're just starting to build your own herb garden. You're just starting to build your own herb garden.

Let's kickstart your herb garden this summer!
